030600.68.02 Contemporary history of Russia

Training language – Russian.

The program is realized by the Institute of the Humanities, Russian History Department.

The general supervision of the master program 030600.68.02 "Contemporary history of Russia" is carried out by Severjyanov Michael Dmitrievich, Professor, Doctor of Science (PhD in History), Head of the Russian History Department. Form of education – full-time tuition, 2 years. Main Educational Program (MEP) has the Russian accreditation.

Uniqueness and relevance of the program of the magistracy bases on the fact that it focused on medium-term prospect of development of "intellectual demand" in historical researches. The situation, which the modern community of historians appeared in, allows us to predict a near return to the classical range of problems of Russian history, and in particular the contemporary history of Russia. There is more and more obvious a role of Contemporary history of Russia as points of intersection of all new directions of historical researches. The gender history, historical demography, political history, public history, history of everyday life, personal history, historical urbanistics and other approaches are capable to unite in a disciplinary framework of Contemporary history of Russia and to make the contribution to development of modern science.

The practical importance of this master program is effected by the horizon of expectations of modern society in relation to historical science. On the one hand, people wait for the answer to questions of the nature of the state and essence of political evolution processes from historians. On the other hand, there is an insistent need for the highly educated experts, capable to draw the reasonable conclusions about the reasons of the major historical events, both the past, and the present. The master program "The Contemporary History of Russia" is aimed at preparation of such experts at the Siberian Federal University.
